

Unit 8 — Post-Colonial Voices, Advanced

Track E • Klasse 12 • Niveau E (Basisfach / Leistungsfach)

Learning objectives

- I can read longer post-colonial extracts and identify the writer's stance on the imperial archive in detail.
- I can use academic-postcolonial vocabulary (hybridity, mimicry, the subaltern, double consciousness, world-Anglophone).
- I can write a 400-word essay sustaining a complex post-colonial argument.

Lead-in

Klasse 12 returns to post-colonial writing with a longer reach: an extract from Salman Rushdie's East / West (1994), one from Tsitsi Dangarembga's Nervous Conditions (1988), and one from Arundhati Roy's non-fiction The Algebra of Infinite Justice (2002). The class spent the lesson learning to read hybridity not as celebration but as a working condition.

Key points

- Rushdie (1994): The narrator's two surnames sit side by side on a London library card. The library card itself is a postcolonial artefact: two languages, two empires, one borrower.
- Roy (2002): In an essay on the Indian state after the 1998 nuclear tests, Roy refuses the celebratory we; her we is conditional, audible and ironised.

Practise

- Match: hybridity → Bhabha; subaltern → Spivak; double consciousness → Du Bois; contrapuntal reading → Said.
- T or F: mimicry in Bhabha is a strategy of compliance; the subaltern in Spivak refers to those without representational access.
- Build 4 sentences applying academic post-colonial vocabulary to the three extracts.

Your turn

Post-colonial essay, 400 words. Argue a complex thesis sustained across the three extracts. Use 3 integrated quotes + 4 academic-postcolonial terms + 5 academic discourse markers + 1 cleft.

Reflect

- I can identify each writer's stance on the imperial archive.
- I can use 5+ academic-postcolonial terms.
- I can write a 400-word post-colonial essay.
