

Unit 9 — Youth Protest Movements

Track E • Klasse 10 • Niveau E

Niveau E

1. Reading

Read the text, then answer in full sentences.

The school-strike climate movement of 2018-2020 drew millions of young people into weekly walk-outs across more than 130 countries. Its central demand — that governments listen to climate scientists — was clear, and its tactic — visible absence — was easily understood by the public. The Lisbon housing movement of 2024-2026, by contrast, used occupations of empty buildings and detailed policy papers. Its demands were narrower and harder to summarise. It is precisely the legibility of the first movement, some commentators argue, that made it useful to politicians; and precisely the specificity of the second that has produced sharper policy results.

2. Practise

1. Build a cleft sentence: emphasise the legibility in the legibility of the first movement made it useful.
2. T or F from text: school-strike was in 130+ countries; Lisbon housing demands were broad; specificity produced sharper results.
3. Build 4 cleft sentences emphasising different elements of the same fact.

3. Write

Panel-style discussion (5 min). Groups of 4. Each speaker delivers a 60-second opening on: what makes a youth movement effective? Use 1 cleft + 1 hedge + 1 specific example. Other speakers ask 1 follow-up.

Lösungen Controlled. 1. It was precisely the legibility of the first movement that made it useful.

2. T, F (narrower), T.

Productive. 3. Open.

T1. millions across 130+ countries; listen to climate scientists; building occupations + policy papers; narrower / harder to summarise.

T2. 2018-2020; visible absence (school walk-outs); 2024-2026 / building occupations + policy papers; legibility wins attention, specificity wins policy.

T3. It was the legibility ... that made it useful. It was the specificity ... that produced sharper results. It was the public that decided. It was the writers that were responsible.

T4. Open.
