Unit 4 — Short Stories and Style

Track E · Klasse 11 · Niveau E (Basisfach / Leistungsfach)

Learning objectives I

- I can read a contemporary short story and identify three stylistic moves (image cluster, sentence rhythm, narrator distance).
- *I can use a wider relative-clause toolkit (whose, of whom, in which) accurately.*
- I can write a 300-word stylistic-analysis essay.

Lead-in I

The class read a contemporary short story called The Hour Before. Six pages. One narrator who is kept very tightly on the hour before something bigger happens off-stage. The class spent the lesson noticing what the author did not show. By the end, Maja had counted seven sentences in which a thing was named only by the way someone reacted to it.

Reading I

Reading — The Hour Before (extract)
The hour before is the only one I remember. The kettle was on, whose whistle had not yet started; the cat was asleep, of whom I was, in the worst way, jealous; the corridor in which my mother stood was lit by the standing lamp, which she had bought in the year I learned to read. None of this is important. All of it is the only material I have.

Grammar — wider relative-clause toolkit whose — possession (people / things / animals): the kettle, whose whistle had not yet started. of whom / of which — formal: the cat, of whom I was jealous. in which — formal: the corridor in which my mother stood.

Reading II

Defining vs. non-defining still applies. Use the wider toolkit deliberately — it lifts register.

Practise I

Niveau E — controlled

1. Choose: whose / of whom / in which: the corridor ___ my mother stood; the cat ___ I was jealous; the kettle ___ whistle had not yet started.
2. T or F: of which is informal; whose can refer to things; in which is more formal than where.

Niveau E — productive

3. Build 4 sentences using each of whose / of whom / of which / in which.

Your turn I

Stylistic-analysis essay, 300 words. Read the extract. Identify three stylistic moves. Use 3 wider-toolkit relative clauses + 1 cleft + 2 academic discourse markers.

Sample

Three stylistic moves do most of the work in The Hour Before. The first is the deliberate weight of the relative clauses — the kettle, whose whistle had not yet started; the cat, of whom I was jealous; the corridor in which my mother stood. The cumulative effect is incantatory: each domestic object earns a subordinate clause, as if the narrator were unable to let any of them go. Accordingly, what the prose refuses to do is move forward; the hour stretches by way of relative clauses rather than action. The second move is the narrator's flat self-correction — None of this is important. All of it is the only material I have. It is the contradiction, more than either statement, that does the work. By contrast with a more transparent narrator, this voice insists on simultaneously dismissing and elevating the domestic detail. The third move is the absence of the larger event. Whatever happens after the hour before is kept entirely off-stage; the prose gives us no help. In this regard, the story is doing something quite specific to short fiction: pressing on a narrow window of attention until the window becomes the subject. The reader's task is to feel the weight of the cat, the kettle, the corridor, and to register, slowly, that the absent event is not the point. The point is the pressure that absence exerts on what remains.

Your turn II

Reflect I

- I can identify three stylistic moves in a contemporary short story.
- I can use whose / of whom / of which / in which.
- I can write a 300-word stylistic-analysis essay.

Further reading / listening I

- Granta, The New Yorker, The Paris Review — short fiction archives.
- James Wood, How Fiction Works — accessible chapter samples.