2. Reading

Read the text and use it for the activities below.

Reading — sample poem (anonymous, contemporary)

Fourteen lines, two stanzas. The first is the outside; the second is what is overheard. The line-breaks fall, mostly, before strong stresses, so that each line ends on a small held breath. There are no full rhymes. There are three half-rhymes — light / late, door / floor, gone / alone — that sit at the close of the second stanza, where the speaker turns inward. The persona is not named. The pronoun shifts from they to we in the final couplet, which is the moment the poem decides what it has been doing all along.

Vocabulary — poetic analysis line, line-break, enjambment, stanza, couplet, image, image cluster, simile, metaphor, personification, persona, voice, tone, meter, iambic, half-rhyme / slant rhyme, full rhyme, alliteration, assonance, caesura.

3. Practise

Niveau E — controlled

1. Match: enjambment → line continues without pause; couplet → two-line unit; persona → speaker / speaker-voice; assonance → vowel echo.
2. T or F: half-rhymes are looser than full rhymes; a caesura is a pause within a line; iambic = stressed-unstressed.

Niveau E — productive

3. Build 3 sentences using enjambment, half-rhyme, persona.

4. Your turn

Poetic-analysis essay, 280 words. Pick a poem from the class anthology (or use the sample above). Identify form, voice, one figurative move. Use 6 poetic-analysis terms + 1 quote + 1 cleft.

Sample

The poem is a fourteen-liner with no title and no named persona. Its fourteen lines fall into two stanzas — the first the outside, the second the overheard — and the form is closer to a modified-sonnet shape than to anything regular. What does the most work in this poem is the rhythm of the line-breaks: enjambment falls, almost consistently, before a strong stress, so that each line ends on a small held breath. The effect is incantatory and slightly suspenseful. There are no full rhymes; there are three half-rhymes — light / late, door / floor, gone / alone — clustered at the close of the second stanza, where the persona turns inward and the we of the final couplet appears for the first time. Accordingly, the poem's most important move is the small grammatical shift from they to we, which the line-break-rhythm and the half-rhymes have prepared us for. It is precisely the shift, and not any single image, that does the argumentative work. The voice is restrained; the tone, almost archival; the persona, deliberately ungendered. By contrast with louder contemporary lyric, this poem's confidence is in its willingness to under-explain. The reader's job is to do the small final addition that the we at the end demands.
